Then she completely lost her head, and shrieked for me to help her, and seemed on the point of going off into hysterics; and yet so strange is the effect of fear, that but for the circumstances I could have sworn she was nearly laughing. However, I gave her an arm and hurried towards the stepping-stones. Oh, poor Sorrow, they will kill poor Sorrow! she cried, turning nervously towards the dog; but Sorrow, as soon as we moved, turned tail and flew like lightning across the field with the cattle after him, then he rushed to her feet again, and she jumped with new terror as they followed. I was afraid she would throw herself into the water in a paroxysm of fright, but instead she cried as she placed a foot--a little dainty foot it...
